I was born in Glennallen, Alaska to Dayn and Dawn Cooper. They moved to Fairbanks and lived in a small train caboose right on Cripple Creek off Chena Pump Road. They lived in the caboose while they were doing their best to build their own home. They moved into the home, however sadly it burned down before it was finished or insured.

Fast forward a decade. After hearing about the importance of a safe and secure home my whole life, I was always interested in building structures. I would attempt to build many successful and unsuccessful play forts and treehouses. But I was always steeped in building and the trades.

As I got older, I began working for my dad who would earn the title of Vice President and eventually go on to take ownership of Chandler Plumbing and Heating. I also worked for my uncle Tim Sonnenberg, owner of TS Construction, as one of his first employees.

I love anything to do with building homes and the science of building systems. I used to love sitting around listening to the conversations of my father, my uncles, and anyone else who would let me, soaking up information.

I learned many things working for both my dad and uncle and would eventually go on to work for Dufseth Construction, and then ultimately Golden Heart Construction.

I started the first iteration of my own company in 2011, simply as a desperate attempt to make money in the wintertime with a seasonal job to support a family of my own. I immediately attended classes to earn my residential endorsement. I loved the classes, and sought out any information or classes I could find to sharpen my knowledge. I came to know my calling in life, I knew I was made to build people's homes.

I still look back on the first home we had and set a high level of importance on a safe home, but also a long-term healthy home. I love helping customers with their own homes and any problems or projects they want to achieve.
